AUSTIN
the heart of
TEXAS
DESIGN

“Austin pushes the boundaries of design. ‘Cookie cutter’ isn’t a term used here; every home we design has personality and character.”

HOME MEANS MORE

“Everyone deserves to live in a home that gives them a sense of belonging, that lets them feel complete, and that gives them joy. Now, people are realizing how true that is. The last year has been full of uncertainty, and one of the only things we can control is our home. There’s a huge sense of relief when we are able to be inspired, uplifted and energized in the spaces we live in,” Lindsey and Nelson say.

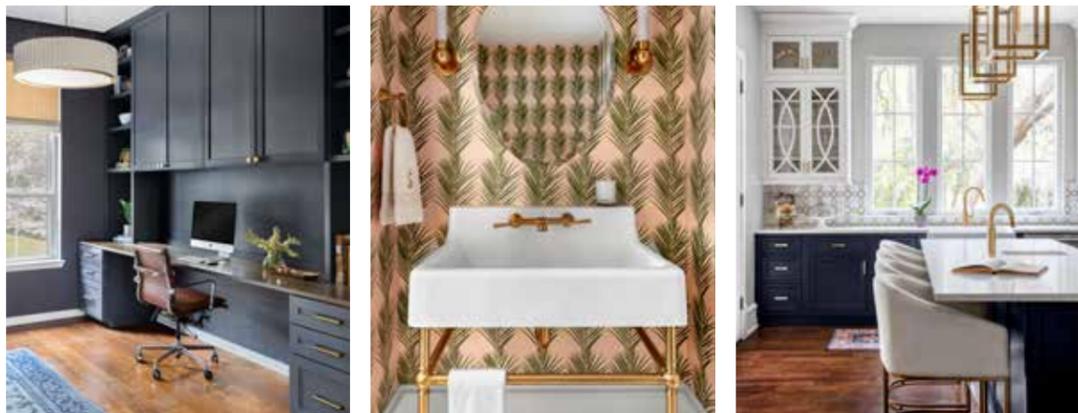

WOW FACTOR

“To us, so much of great design is about creating moments that draw your eye and leave a lasting impression, Lindsey and Nelson say of their philosophy. “A concept is successful when it brings the user an experience of the extraordinary; that’s what we want every client to experience.”

These are inspiring times in Austin design, as people are more excited than ever to improve their surroundings, both for their health and daily enrichment. “Design never sleeps in Austin,” say Stephanie Lindsey and Jessica Nelson, principal designers of Etch Design Group. “Currently, the Austin design scene is innovating and creating unique opportunities for homeowners.” Not surprising for the progressive city that welcomes people from all over the world with different lifestyles and aesthetics. “Austin is unique. We can go from designing a home with Spanish influences to a home with extremely modern elements, all in one day,” they say. “We see modern design trending, but there are still many nods to traditional and Hill Country.” Such diversity is a huge draw for Lindsey and Nelson, who find inspiration at every turn, from the local AIA Homes Tour and East Austin Studio Tour to downtown Austin architectural elements and lakeside residences.
